A New and Thrilling Serial.

We have made exclusive arrangements for publishing as a serial story the famous M. Quad's latest novel, "The Golden Caves." It is a tale of treasure seeking in the far west, and we are sure the succeeding chapters, as they appear in these columns, will be eagerly followed by our readers. The story is beautifully illustrated.

M. Quad Writes a Novel.

There is no more popular writer in America today than M. Quad (Charles B. Lewis), whose latest novel, "The Golden Caves," we have completed arrangements for publishing in these columns. Don't miss a chapter.

As Others See Us.

From the New York Graphic.

For the first time since 1873 the majority of the successful state ticket in Texas will be less than 100-000. The cause of this is that there are two democratic ticket in the field, the result of a split in the state convention. Governor James S. Hogg, who was elected two years ago, is the best known throughout the country for his strong hostility to the railroads and all corporate interests, and has, it is asserted, been instrumental in not only checking to a notable extent the rapidly increasing prosperity and material development of the state but in keeping away from its borders much capital which would otherwise have found profitable investment in industrial and other enterprises, for which the state under equitable supervision, offers a magnificent field. The opposition within the the party to Mr.
Hogg's candidacy in 1886 though confined to the canvass prior to the nominating convention, was most vigorous and was led by many of the best men in the party, who maintained that Hogg did not represent true democratic principles. He was, however, very popular with the alliance and other elements, and received the nomination and was elected. His course since, in regard to the railroad commission and other matters of state policy, have alienated a considerable number of his former supporters, and the fight in the primaries for delegates to the state convention was unparalleled in the history of the state for bitterness.
Hogg's friends controlled the state organization, and at the assembling of the convention it became apparent that its power would be used to force his renomination. Arbitrary rulings of the chairman of the state committee, and the refusal to recognize a large number of delegates opposed to the governor, together with the enunciation of principles in the platform inspired by Hogg, contrary to the doctrine and spirit of the democratic party, caused his opponents to withdraw from the convention, adopt a new platform and nominate a full state ticket, at the head of which was placed George Clark of Waco.
The republican party of the state, though comparatively small in numbers, is yet well organized.
It cast 88,422 votes for President Harrison in 1888, and 77,742 votes for governor in 1890. No state ticket will be put in the field this year, and in its convention the party indorsed the the candidacy of Judge Clark, and he will receive 80 per cent or more of the republican vote. There is no politics in this, and in indorsing the Clark ticket the party was actuated only by its conviction of what was best for the interests of the state. This is the only instance in the campaign of the year in which the republicans have given their support to a straight democratic ticket, but it is one of those cases met with now and then in all parts of the country, in which a desire to promote the general welfare rises superior to all other considerations and makes parties a unit in the advocacy of good men and better politics. Judge Clark, who is a lawyer by profession, has long been a prominent figure in the state, and is one of the most widely and favorably known of its citizens throughout the country.

A Centenarian's Awful Fate

Brazil, Ind., Nov. 2.—Mrs.
Susan Shepherd, aged 103 years, the oldest resident in this county, and probably the oldest person in the State, and still hale and hearty met her death in a violent manner last night at the home of her grandson in Bowling Green. She was sitting in a room alone reading, when her clothes caught fire from an open grate, and in an instant she was developed in flames. The flames entered her lungs and stifled her cries and she soon died. The body was burned to a crisp before anyone knew of the accident. The old lady came this country when it was a wilderness and had since resided within its borders. Her children and grandchildren number in to the hundreds.

An old almanac for 1814 gives the following as the rate of postage prevailing at that time: "For every single letter by land, for 40 miles, 8 cents; 90 miles, 10 cents; 150 miles, 12½ cents; 300 miles, 17 cents; 500 miles, 20 cents, and for more than 500 miles, 25 cents. No allowance to be made for intermediate miles. Every double letter is to pay double the said rates; every triple letter, triple; every packet weighing one ounce, at the rate of four single letters each ounce. Every ship letter originally received at an office for delivery, 6 cents. Magazines and pamphlets not over 50 miles, 1 cent per sheet; over 50 miles and not exceeding 100 miles, 1½ cents per sheet; over 100 miles, 2 cents per sheet.
